MEMORANDUM FOR: ATTENDEES OF IC LEADERSHIP VTC

SUBJECT: Joint Intelligence Debriefing Centre Current Capabilities

1. Following discussions at the Pol/Mil team meeting held on 4 June 2004, with regard to the tasking on the resources of the Joint Intelligence Debriefing Centre (JIDC), I have gleaned the following information from [redacted] (JIDC Collection Manager) as to the current SDR loading and the resources they have to address them. In summary, there are currently (as of noon, 4th June 2004) 252 active SDR's that it can be reasonably expected to collect against. However, many of these SDR's are for multiple sources so, in reality this would entail 374 debriefings. This does not account for the fact that many SDRs are of such a size that it takes a number of interviews to answer a single SDR. These are predominantly those of a generic nature, pertaining to organizational structure and operating procedures.

3. The situation above does not allow time for drafting IIRs resulting from the interviews which take far more time than the interviews themselves. If you factor this in, then the number of interviews conducted must be reduced dramatically. As previously stated, these figures are current today, should any further SDRs be submitted, then they too will have to be factored into the equation. This statement does not take into account the situation regarding War Crimes issues or the priority system employed at the ISG, which by their very nature impose further restrictions on debriefing operations.
