US, and a lot of chaos. We were stopped, and I told the soldiers I had an AK, a Radio, and a camera. I told them I carry the AK because I have a lot of enemies and that I was trying to get the radio fixed because my family and I thought we might could use it to help protect ourselves. I was then arrested by the soldiers. [REDACTED] claimed he had lots of enemies who live in Pakistan and that they have already killed four of his brothers. He claimed the dispute was over water rights. He claimed the enemies names were [REDACTED], [REDACTED], and [REDACTED]. He related they were all from Khowst, but now lived in Pakistan. [REDACTED] did not report any of this to the police as it was a tribal affair and handled by them. [REDACTED] related the camera was his cousins and that it just happened to be in the car, and that he and most other Afghans carry an AK when they travel to town for protection. [REDACTED] explained his family planned to use the radio establish contact with someone near a border village who could report to them if any of their enemies crossed the border. [REDACTED] did not know who they were going to contact but wanted to get the radio fixed first. [REDACTED] claims he bought the radio in town from a soldier (NFI). He related the soldier gave it to me and he never saw him again. He denies that he ever stated he was given the radion by [REDACTED], as is mentioned in previous interviews by other agencies. He claims that he said he learned to use the radio while he was working for [REDACTED]. [REDACTED] further claimed that Americans gave him his AK, then claimed he got it from [REDACTED] then admitted that he bought the AK he currently had. [REDACTED] explained that [REDACTED] took over an army base from the Americans and that he gave him an AK when he worked for him. [REDACTED] claimed he sold that AK as it was new and in good shape, and bought his current AK for less than half of what he sold the other AK for. Initially, [REDACTED] related he was beaten by US soldiers when taken into custody. He related that he was handcuffed and taken to some airfield and some tall man with green eyes, hit him in the chest and pushed him down. He further related he was struck several times and denies that he was resisting capture or fighting the personnel who custody he was in. Further he related he did not know if the persons were soldiers or even American. The person had long hair, beard and wore short pants, but he did not remember any further description of the person.
