Observed during this interview, [REDACTED] appeared to be very surprised the interviewing team came to see him in his cell. [REDACTED] appeared happy to see the interviewing team and continued to laugh and joked with them. [REDACTED] accepted food and water from the interviewing agent.

The purpose of visiting [REDACTED] in his cell was to take him up on his offer for the interviewing team to see the conditions he is living under. The interviewing agent had promised [REDACTED] during the preceding interview, the interviewing team would come and see him. In an effort to continue to build [REDACTED] trust and confidence in the interviewing agent, the interviewing team came to his cell in lieu of the next scheduled interview.

Upon entering, the interviewing agent greeted [REDACTED] and asked him how he was feeling. He replied he was fine. The interviewing agent, presented [REDACTED] with trail-mix, fresh fruit and water. The interviewing agent placed the food and water on the bunk next to [REDACTED]. At first [REDACTED] declined the food saying he could not accept anything others in the camp were not eating. However, he did accept some the trail-mix soon after and took some of the fruit as the interview team departed.

The interviewing agent told [REDACTED] he had promised him he would come see him in his cell and he was living up to his
